RED AND GUN FOR OCTOBER

Teeming with interest to all who have heard the Red Gods calling, Red and Gun in Canada for October, especially appeal to followers of the trap-line. The leading story in this splendid issue of Canada's premier sportsman's monthly is entitled, "Antimickiaw Lake." Illustrated with six pages of photographs taken right on the Trap-Line by F. W. Williams. It will appeal to everyone who ever had dreams of capturing the many beavers which go to make Canada the richest in wild life. George R. Belton tells in his own inimitable manner how he has been mistaken for several kinds of wild animals. His story will be read with interest. The usual contributors, Bonanza and Bobert Page Lincoln, etc., need no introduction to the sportsman of North America. In addition to the regular departments this month, M. U. Bates takes charge of the Trap Line Department and will conduct it in the usual interesting manner. Red and Gun in Canada is published monthly by W. J. Taylor, Limited, Woodstock, Ont.

WAS FORCED TO QUIT ENTIRELY

"Tanais Put Me On the Job Feeling As Well As I Ever Felt in My Life," He Declares.

"After being such a sick man for six months that I had to quit all work, Tanais has put me back on the job feeling as well as I ever did," said W. Anderson, 3400 Quebec Street, Vancouver, B.C.

"I suffered untold agonies on account of stomach trouble. Everything I ate would lie on my stomach like a lump of lead and then sour and form gas that bloated me up and I could hardly breathe and my heart would beat like a trip-hammer. I had spells of dizziness and often had terrible headaches. At night I used to roll and toss about on the bed for hours unable to sleep and when morning came I was so tired and worn out that I could hardly stand up. Finally I became so weak that I had to give up my job."

"I read a statement in the papers telling how a man with troubles just like mine had been helped by Tanais, so I decided to try it. The first bottle did me no much good that I kept right on with it, and by the time I had finished the second bottle I was at work and haven't missed a day since. My appetite is splendid, all troubles have disappeared, and I have gained several pounds in weight. I haven't had a headache or dizzy spell since I finished the first bottle of Tanais, and I sleep like a log every night."

Tanais is sold in Red Deer by Gatzert-Cornett Drug & Book Co., and by the leading druggist in every town.

RETIRED MEMBER OF ALBERTAN HONORED

(Calgary Alberta)

The office of the Morning Albertan was the scene of a very pleasant ceremony on Wednesday afternoon, when a presentation was made to Mr. H. Crossfield, who for the past four years has held the position of accountant with the Albertan. As a token of the esteem and respect in which he was held by the staff and management, he was presented with a handsome brown leather club bag, fitted with black ebony brushes and toilet requisites. The presentation was made by H. J. Post, business manager, who expressed regret that Mr. Crossfield was severing his connection with the company, and remarked that the business end was losing a most conscientious employee. He hoped that Mr. Crossfield would be successful in his new venture, and general manager at Sylvan Lake, and that he knew he had the good wishes of everyone of the staff in his new undertaking.

Mr. Crossfield thanked the staff very heartily for their expression of good will, and said that he was sorry to leave. He is taking up his new business immediately.

PACIFIC COAST HAS BIG FUTURE

Hon. C. C. Ballantyne, minister of marine and fisheries, has returned to Ottawa from the Pacific coast on a highly optimistic frame of mind as to conditions in Western Canada. In view of the prosperity prevailing and the good outlook for the future, the minister expressed the view that there is every justification for the carrying out of the government's harbor improvement plans at Vancouver, Victoria and Prince Rupert. Prince Rupert, he said, promises to develop into a shipping port of considerable importance, as business in that part of the province promises to thrive, and it is five hundred miles nearer the Orient than any Pacific port.

Of the export trade from British Columbia, he expressed his opinion that it is only in its infancy. The Canadian government merchant marine will put on the Pacific coast, he said, is only in its infancy. The government, when all their ships under construction on the Pacific coast are completed, will have sixteen ships in commission, and these ships will be operated from British Columbia ports.

Very little to report in the produce market during the week. Butter of all kinds firm; good demand for dairy butter, but little offering. Choice table butter from 52c down, and No. 1 from 45c down; straight receipts from 44c to 45c; Cream 52c to 53c; No. 1 and 55c for No. 2, and car lots on basis of 58c. Eggs firm, and most of the offerings are paid for at 17c.

No improvement in hide prices yet, and quotations for the best hides do not exceed 10c and down to 5c for rough hides. Well is still selling slowly, according to eastern reports. Furs are not moving in any quantities.

DEMONSTRATED SUPERIORITY OF ALBERTA COALS

Calgary, September 30.—Declaring that the operators of Alberta's coal fields are the best in the world, the Alberta Coal Association has been conducting a series of coal tests for the Alberta provincial government.

Mr. McCall, power engineer for the city of Calgary, returned Thursday from Winnipeg where he has been conducting a series of coal tests for the Alberta provincial government.

Mr. McCall comes back with the cheering information that his tests showed that Alberta coal is the best in the world, and that the effort to prevent the importation of liquor for beverage purposes is an infringement upon personal liberty.

Those who argue against legislation are advocates of anarchy and have not yet learned that freedom is found not in the absence of law but in obedience to law in observing these principles which lie at the base of all human welfare.

There is no question that the abolition of the bar has resulted in saving lives. It is a matter of common knowledge that the use of intoxicating liquors has been restricted, crime has been greatly diminished. If we are discovered as a matter of fact simply finding out a condition of things already existing in the minds and personal habits of those who have not yet learned the value of a proper sense of social responsibility.

If banishing the bar has accomplished such beneficial results, how much greater will be the result when the people are sane enough to banish "booze" itself. Alcohol has no value as a food; its use has been called in question by the highest authorities in medical circles; it has a real value for its use in the past, and when we make alcohol our servant and refuse it a place of mastery in our lives.

None who has ever become a total abstemious has had reason to regret his course. Drunkenness is admitted by all to be a curse. It is the only poison of the system through persistent moderate drinking is greater than in the case of those who indulge in a heavy spree, if they drink at all.

Total abstinence is as sensible for the state as it is for the individual and the mind of the people is expressed in prohibitory legislation.

Cutting off inter-provincial trade will not deprive the liquor traffic within provincial boundaries will make it easier also to deal with illicit manufacture and boot-legging.

The passing of the referendum on October 25th by a decisive majority will aid greatly in making possible better law enforcement, and will serve as a mandate to prohibit the manufacture of intoxicating liquor which will be the next logical step in the progressive advance of temperance legislation. It is the height of folly to take the position that some lawmakers of temperance have assumed that because the present measure does not provide for the prohibition of the manufacture of liquor they will not support the present measure at all.

It is equally absurd to refuse to take the measure which has been made possible to restrict the liquor traffic on the ground that cutting off inter-provincial trade will deprive the business into the hands of the doctors and druggists. Granted that it will have this effect, it will place a responsibility upon the members of the profession of dealing with this question upon their real merits. Undoubtedly there are some members of the profession who cannot be trusted to act upon a very high standard of morality, but these are not the men who should be upon to deal effectively with the issue when the responsibility for doing so is placed squarely upon them.

The medical profession is as much concerned with the moral health of the community as it is with the physical well being of individual citizens. The slavery of selfish individualism must pass in order that the freedom of social solidarity may be secured. A new day is dawning, and in its light we shall discover the real meaning and value of freedom.

"Last night I was a care free boy. My play was life, my life was play. No future called: from day to day I laughed and romped and lived—a boy."

But now another day I see—A day to do with as I will. Shall I be fraught with good or ill? What message does it bring to me? I catch its gleam, I breathe its air. I hear its ringing call to me. Its call to live to serve to be. My beating heart finds voice in prayer: In prayer that I may find the way. The way that He in service went: A life for others freely spent. To meet the torn world's need today: To help the other boy who gropes Along the road I just passed through. Stood wept with feelings strange and new. Help him to realize his hopes. And now I call me to a quest. To love, to laugh, to work, to play. To serve, to sacrifice, to pray. He calls—and He shall have my best."

HEIR TO TURK THRONE HAD POISON TO LIPS

Constantinople, Oct. 3.—It became known today that Abdul Mejid, heir apparent to the Turkish throne, attempted to commit suicide Thursday night by trying to swallow poison. A manservant dashed the bottle to the floor, and the prince's attendants reached his lips. Mejid previously had written a sealed letter to the sultan.

The heir apparent is said to have been nervous from his enforced seclusion and inability to go to the Angora front where regular Turkish forces are fighting the Nationalists.

The aim at suicide is believed to have been due to despair over his country's future.

THE NEWS WEEKLY SERMON

By Rev. G. D. Armstrong
Stand fast therefore in the Liberty Whence Christ hath made us free, and be not entangled again by the yoke of bondage, Gal. 5:1.

These words of Paul may well serve as a message to the people of Alberta today as they deal with the problem of liquor.

It will be argued by some that prohibitory legislation is the very remedy for the situation, and that the effort to prevent the importation of liquor for beverage purposes is an infringement upon personal liberty.

In the majority of cases it will be found that those who call so loudly for personal liberty, instead of being free from the bondage of the law of appetite and their motive is really personal selfishness rather than personal freedom.

Those who argue against legislation are advocates of anarchy and have not yet learned that freedom is found not in the absence of law but in obedience to law in observing these principles which lie at the base of all human welfare.

There is no question that the abolition of the bar has resulted in saving lives. It is a matter of common knowledge that the use of intoxicating liquors has been restricted, crime has been greatly diminished. If we are discovered as a matter of fact simply finding out a condition of things already existing in the minds and personal habits of those who have not yet learned the value of a proper sense of social responsibility.

If banishing the bar has accomplished such beneficial results, how much greater will be the result when the people are sane enough to banish "booze" itself. A QUARREL and A TORNADO

"Oh, there was a little chicken. That was very fond of pickin'."

The hired man, he of the lank, loose-jointed body and the unfeeling, brian draining the doggerel. He was hitching the inside trace of the horse to the wagon. The hired man, Weston, less doted than his employee, was taking down the reins of the horse.

"Well, Pete," said the farmer, with a ring of genuine reproach in his voice, "I suppose this is your last day with us and company."

"Yes," Pete answered, drawing, "discharged without my papers."

"Well," Weston retorted sharply, "you chose your own course, and it meant stay or go, according."

Gossip had reached the nervous, quick-tempered farmer that his hired man had been telling unflattering tales of him at the village store, and he had given Pete the choice of either publicly apologizing or of finding another job. Pete had merely asked, as an accuser was when Mr. Weston had told him that he did not know, Pete refused not only to apologize but even to discuss the matter. From the horse's shoulder Pete took the reins as he slipped from the front upright ladder of the rack and then knotted it. He was amazing, the hired man with his head on his neck, his hands on his hips, and his eyes on the hired man's back. The hired man, who had rather stand by the card "hooking-up" than watch the card-reading take his sometimes plain, his trace in the village store, "where's the kid?"

"Hill the jugs. And—also by the way," responded Weston "please be careful of your talk round him if he's going to the field with you. You can't care no more for him than you do for me."

Pete's face suddenly darkened. "Say!" he exclaimed. "Will you please be careful of your talk round me? Maybe I don't think much of him, but he's a hired man, maybe I do. You can't tell offhand. Especially when you're sore."

With one hand on the horizontal boards Pete vaulted into the middle of the rack.

"Oh, there was a little chicken. That was very fond—"

A shrill young voice piped the hired man's name. The hired man, eight-year-old son, staggered towards them with a gallon jug in each hand. Pete was transfixed at the sound of his long, solemn face lighted. "Hi there, Tike," he beamed.

"Way up the top the apple tree. But the top limb was rotten, and it fell to the bottom—"

Taking the jugs from the boy, he caught him by the wrist and, with a great show of straining and effort, hoisted him aboard. Then, still carrying out the jug, he turned and gave the sweat from his brow. Tike laughed hilariously, but Pete cast a puzzled look at the farmer.

"Say," he remarked, "there's sweat. Whew! Dye notice, there's not a breath of air. It's a fact, the sweat burst out all over me just lifting them jugs and the kid."

Alertly, with the practiced eye of a pro, Weston scanned the west. The air was sultry and motionless.

"A thunderstorm in an hour," Weston said nervously. "How near's that stack topped out?"

"About a ten yet," Pete answered. "Can't you ride out to look it over? Only John and Fred were coming this afternoon, being Saturday. And they don't know a haystack from a hole in the ground."

"I'll be right out!" the farmer called as the wagon started off.

With another apprehensive glance at the sky, Weston hurried to the stable for his saddle horse. A damaged girl delayed him for half an hour. When at last he cantered into the road a stillness as of midnight had fallen upon the blazing day.

The sunken head and downy legs of the walnut trees, and the chickens were flocking to their roosting shed. His road to the haystack was shrouded on the west by an orange haze that had never been trimmed and that had grown as high trees. The jungle of weeds and briars that flourished within its shelter cut off his view until, at a swift gallop, he swung through a gap into the field. At some distance was the nearly finished stack, built so close to the hedge that only a haystack could be driven between. Pete's form on the peak of the stack was outlined with striking clearness against an indigo sky.

The long, slanting arm of the derick was like a gray pencil line across a freshly washed slate. The horse was moving out along its trail, and a load of hay was rising on high trees. For a second the prairie took possession of the man, as it invariably did when its vistas unfolded. He leveled it spread, as boundless as a summer sea—a mile of hay in window and cock, a mile of oats and of corn—and so, mile following mile, until the mind wanted to boggle. How orderly it all was, how fertile—and all producing wealth for him. Weston, who had constant—except for the moving rim of purple cloud on the horizon.

Swinging to the ground, he let his reins fall. All was not right at the stack. John, who usually led the horse, was on the rack, setting the fork. Fred, the fork expert, was not in view. Little Tike was making rather ineffectual efforts to manage the horse.

"Where's Fred?" asked Weston, striding up.

"Got overhauled and had to go home," John told him.

"Why don't you take the fork, Mr. Weston, and let me handle it?" called Pete. "He's not used to it and sends up bunches as big as a house—and I can't handle them on this lousy petal. We've got to put a roof on this party quick, or it's a goner. There's a twister coming; I can hear the wind or can you?"

Mr. Weston took charge of the fork, and Weston went to the rack and the work went faster. Light, clean bunches of hay, torn from the wagon, were piled into the middle, and, at the pole, revolved, placed them at the desired spot. Pete, buried to his waist, intoned a rustic melody: "Oh, the wind or can you?"

Tike, playing alone in a near-by cock, echoed it.

A cry from the boy caused them to stop and turn. Tike was pointing to the west. The line of cloud that had been along the horizon now seemed to be mounted the sky. It had broken in the middle like an eruption and streamed downwards to the ground in a funnel shape, dull grey and with wicked amber and yellow. And the roar as of an approaching train was distinct.

"A hard blow, sure enough!" cried Weston. "Get on the fork, Pete, and come down till it passes. It's a twister, and it's a twister."

"Oh, never mind; send up more hay. Just one hole here to fill, and the twister will pass."

Reluctantly, Weston flattened the spurs of the big horse and pressed it deep into the field. But he was not to see it lifted. The storm came on swifter than he had imagined and with tenfold more fury. The day seemed like a room in which oil lamp had exhausted its fuel; the earth was sunk in twilight, and the sun, like a charred, smoking wick, shone red and lurid through a thickening fog.

The fog began to envelop the workers. It was a rain or mist, but it was the thunder of rain. But it was not thunder—rather the sound of great timbers wrenched apart with terrible strain. A mile away something flat shot from a red barn and soared through the air like a smooth stone, called by a boy. A second flat object fell in pursuit. It was the shingle roof. The walls of the barn seemed as easily as a child's house of blocks.

"Come down, Pete!" shouted Weston, but he could scarcely hear him. "Send up the carriage!"

Weston grabbed the fork to trip and trip it. But the trip rope was tangled, and the spurs were fast in the rack. He tugged and strained, but he could not get it. Then he slipped, and he fell through a crack up to his hip.

As he struggled to free himself he saw in a distant field an entire haycock float upward, balloonlike, until suddenly it showed, whirled, and was swung into the air. Now the sky was full of cocks, whole and shattered—a hayfield on delirious wings. A solid sky, with a livid and angry vortex, was rushing directly at them. And little Tike stood alone in the open field, comically viewing the spectacle.

"Lie down!" cried Weston, putting himself free of the fork.

But the boy did not hear. The moment his straw hat fell to the ground and spun aloft. Possessed by instinctive fear, he turned and fled toward the stack.

"Lie down!" roared Weston. "The stack might blow on you."

His words against that wind could not carry a yard, and the boy ran on. Weston forgot his man on the stack, forgot himself, forgot everything except his boy.

He sprang to the ground, falling on his hands and knees. He meant to rise and run. He did rise—but not by any effort of his own. His feet tapped the ground, but they felt no weight. He was borne by a current stronger than water. The breath was driven from his body. He struck the hedge and stopped. He saw his horse float sideways and lodge near him. And, flattened against the tough old trunk, unable to rise, he wondered, he saw the world as if through dirty water wherein swam objects monstrous and grotesque.

And the main thing Weston saw was Tike was at first secure in the lee of the stack. Pete, sticking his heels in the slope, was trying to clamber down. Then a bunch of hay from the top was hurled at Pete's head. He lost his hold and fell, was checked by the bulge, but went over it on top of Tike, whom he dragged down, with one arm encircling his neck. A handful of hay covered them. It heaved as they were trying to rise. Another bigger bunch crashed through the roof of the stack and blew against the side of it. The whole stack had been overturned and rebuilt, bottom up. The rack and wagon blew against the side of it. The derick pole toppled and fell on top, and Pete and Tike were at the bottom of it.

Almost in one gust the main whirl of the tornado was past. In five minutes the farmer was on his feet, and he was, with their dash of rain and hail, had ceased. But Weston still lay there. He had been lodged, looking out of dim, half-closed eyes.

He shivered in the air that was, suddenly many degrees colder. The hedge was flattened across the road, with its yellow, pungent roots wrung from the earth. Straight across the field lay a wide, ragged swath where the cocks had been scattered or whipped away. It was a top-sy-turvy world. When the farmer got up, he was a little surprised to find that he could still walk. At first he merely started round him, wondering foolishly why he was not hurt. Then, slowly, his senses returned. What of Pete and Tike? Had they been hurt in the fall? He and John must dig them out. John came up from behind just with an expression of silly surprise on his face. He had been blown into the adjacent pasture. He admitted doubt of the manner of his flight, but in five minutes he was on his feet, and he was, with his head, breathless and rumped, but unharmed.

When Weston told him what had happened to Pete and Tike, John was a show of great concern, stepped to the disordered mound of hay. "Do you know, what a man's head would be on the double-quick. It's as tight as a key's setting. And six tons of steel impenetrable to the strongest back. I knew a man once that was smothered to death under less hay than that."

"The words brought Weston to himself. "Smothered? No; impossible. It is tight, though. They will be smothered—Pete and Tike."

"It was my fault."

Grabbing a fork from the ground, he went to the stack. He saw the light, interwoven structure he could hardly tear a handful.

"I'll never move it this way! The derick!" he cried.

With swift hands they tilted the derick on its base and pinned it to the ground with the iron stakes. The horse, although bundled into the hedge, was still fast to his rope, and John led him to his path. Weston rode the big fork to the top of the heap and with one shove sank the steel implement deep into the hay, just where Pete and the boy had fallen. The rope tightened; the pole swung aloft and over the stack, jumping into the hollow. Weston again drove the prongs into the bottom of it. But the horse could not budge the load. They would have to remove an entire side of the stack.

Scrambling from the hole, Weston sank the fork into the free hay. No sooner had the fork released it over the hole than Weston had swung back and was ready for another load. Again and again the trick was done—a hundred times. The men saw the quarter of an hour half an hour. The humid warmth of the hay sent streams of sweat running down Weston's face; he grew faint from weakness, but he did not slow up.

At last, a yard from the ground, he dropped the fork and called John. "Here's something hard," Weston exclaimed at last. "It's Pete's back. He's on his elbow and knees, doubled up like a boy. Pete! Pete!"

Pete did not answer or move; the boy seemed to have lost his spring. "They're gone!" the farmer muttered and claved at the matted hay. "Pete! Tike!"

Then, under the arched bow of the hired man, they saw the boy with his face turned outward beneath the slope, trying to clamber down. The shoulders, Weston pulled him out and started to stretch him flat. But lost his hold and fell, was checked by the bulge, but went over it on top of Tike, whom he dragged down, with one arm encircling his neck. A handful of hay covered them. It heaved as they were trying to rise. Another bigger bunch crashed through the roof of the stack and blew against the side of it. The whole stack had been overturned and rebuilt, bottom up. The rope tightened; the pole swung aloft and over the stack, jumping into the hollow. Weston again drove the prongs into the bottom of it. But the horse could not budge the load. They would have to remove an entire side of the stack.

Scrambling from the hole, Weston sank the fork into the free hay. No sooner had the fork released it over the hole than Weston had swung back and was ready for another load. Again and again the trick was done—a hundred times. The men saw the quarter of an hour half an hour. The humid warmth of the hay sent streams of sweat running down Weston's face; he grew faint from weakness, but he did not slow up.

At last, a yard from the ground, he dropped the fork and called John. "Here's something hard," Weston exclaimed at last. "It's Pete's back. He's on his elbow and knees, doubled up like a boy. Pete! Pete!"

Pete did not answer or move; the boy seemed to have lost his spring. "They're gone!" the farmer muttered and claved at the matted hay. "Pete! Tike!"

Then, under the arched bow of the hired man, they saw the boy with his face turned outward beneath the slope, trying to clamber down. The shoulders, Weston pulled him out and started to stretch him flat. But lost his hold and fell, was checked by the bulge, but went over it on top of Tike, whom he dragged down, with one arm encircling his neck. A handful of hay covered them. It heaved as they were trying to rise. Another bigger bunch crashed through the roof of the stack and blew against the side of it. The whole stack had been overturned and rebuilt, bottom up. The rack and wagon blew against the side of it. The derick pole toppled and fell on top, and Pete and Tike were at the bottom of it.

Almost in one gust the main whirl of the tornado was past. In five minutes the farmer was on his feet, and he was, with their dash of rain and hail, had ceased. But Weston still lay there. He had been lodged, looking out of dim, half-closed eyes.

He shivered in the air that was, suddenly many degrees colder. The hedge was flattened across the road, with its yellow, pungent roots wrung from the earth. Straight across the field lay a wide, ragged swath where the cocks had been scattered or whipped away. It was a top-sy-turvy world. When the farmer got up, he was a little surprised to find that he could still walk. At first he merely started round him, wondering foolishly why he was not hurt. Then, slowly, his senses returned. What of Pete and Tike? Had they been hurt in the fall? He and John must dig them out. John came up from behind just with an expression of silly surprise on his face. He had been blown into the adjacent pasture. He admitted doubt of the manner of his flight, but in five minutes he was on his feet, and he was, with his head, breathless and rumped, but unharmed.

When Weston told him what had happened to Pete and Tike, John was a show of great concern, stepped to the disordered mound of hay. "Do you know, what a man's head would be on the double-quick. It's as tight as a key's setting. And six tons of steel impenetrable to the strongest back. I knew a man once that was smothered to death under less hay than that."

"The words brought Weston to himself. "Smothered? No; impossible. It is tight, though. They will be smothered—Pete and Tike."

"It was my fault."

Grabbing a fork from the ground, he went to the stack. He saw the light, interwoven structure he could hardly tear a handful.

"I'll never move it this way! The derick!" he cried.

With swift hands they tilted the derick on its base and pinned it to the ground with the iron stakes. The horse, although bundled into the hedge, was still fast to his rope, and John led him to his path. Weston rode the big fork to the top of the heap and with one shove sank the steel implement deep into the hay, just where Pete and the boy had fallen. The rope tightened; the pole swung aloft and over the stack, jumping into the hollow. Weston again drove the prongs into the bottom of it. But the horse could not budge the load. They would have to remove an entire side of the stack.

CLEANLINESS IS HEALTH

By the use of Gillett's Lye, house cleaning is made a pleasure instead of a drudgery. It softens the water and cleans thoroughly whether the dirt is visible or invisible. Destroys all bacteria and infectious germs, removes obstructions from drain pipes, closets, sinks, etc. Refrigerators are made delightfully fresh and clean by using one teaspoonful of Gillett's Lye dissolved in two gallons of water.

WEDDING BELLS

HAMLEY-TREBILCOCK

(Canadian Statesman, Bowmanville, Ontario)

A very pretty wedding took place on Wednesday, September 8, at "Engle-side," the home of Mr. and Mrs. P. C. Trebilcock, Division St., when their youngest daughter, Minnie Gertrude, was united in marriage to Norman H. Hamley, late Lieut. R.A.F. The ceremony was performed by Capt. Rev. John Garbutt, of Oakville, assisted by Rev. S. C. Moore. The bride looked charming in an afternoon gown of white georgette crepe over satin, with black picture hat, and carried bride's roses and white heather. She was attended by Miss Hilda Hamley, the groom's sister, who wore French blue tricot, with black hat, and carried pink roses. Mr. A. W. Tucker, Toronto, was best man. The wedding music was played by Mrs. H. F. Hutchison, of Toronto, sister of the bride, who sang "Love's Coronation" during the signing of the register. The house was profusely decorated with asters, gladioli and ferns, and the marriage took place under a large Union Jack. The buffet luncheon was served to about fifty guests, after which Mr. and Mrs. Hamley left on a motor trip. The bride was wearing her travelling suit of navy blue French serge, with small blue feather hat and veil. They will return they will live in Peterboro. The groom served four years in France and Italy and was decorated with the D. F. C., and the Italian Military Medal.

Mr. Norman Hamley is well known in Red Deer, where he formerly worked, and where his brother and sisters still live. He and Mrs. Hamley will receive the heartiest good wishes of many Red Deer friends of the groom and his family.

What Would You Do?

Ten-to-one, you too would use Zam-Buk. Every-oneship by the score, and most forms of skin and scalp disease are "decided" quickly and efficiently at home by this magical ointment. It is the only Zam-Buk's rapid antiseptic healing and wonderful soothing and pain-killing power has been a world revolution.

Here's evidence from Canadian homes.

SCALDED FOOT. Mrs. S. W. 279, Harrison Avenue, Elmwood, Winnipeg, writes:—A pan of boiling water upset over my foot. The burn was so severe that I was unable to walk. I used Zam-Buk and in a few days I was able to walk. I am now well and happy.

GASSED HAND. Mrs. J. W. 279, Harrison Avenue, Elmwood, Winnipeg, writes:—I washed my hand severely with soap and water. The skin was so sore that I was unable to work. I used Zam-Buk and in a few days I was able to work. I am now well and happy.

TOOTH PAIN. Mrs. J. W. 279, Harrison Avenue, Elmwood, Winnipeg, writes:—I had a very bad toothache. I used Zam-Buk and in a few days I was able to eat. I am now well and happy.

FESTERED FOOT. D. J. Shaw, Belfast, P.O. P.E.I. writes:—I had a very bad foot. I used Zam-Buk and in a few days I was able to walk. I am now well and happy.

The Latest in Millinery

Now is the time to select your season's millinery. Right now, we invite you to come and see what is newest and make your selection while the display is so complete. Many materials are difficult to get and to avoid disappointment it is advisable to make an early selection.

The many fascinating styles include large, medium and small hat, made up in velvets, duvetyn and silks. There are many cleverly copied Paris styles fashioned in the work rooms of one of the foremost millinery houses in America, while some of the smartest models have been fashioned right in our own work room. Our prices are attractive. In fact, when it comes right down to millinery values, we have little competition.

Our Mens' Wear Department is a True Friend of the Working Man

Men will find values here that cannot be given elsewhere. This is especially true when it comes to the working man who wants clothes that give satisfaction. We buy only the best brand of goods, and sell for cash, which means a saving to you. When in need of Overalls, Shirts, Underwear, Gloves, Sox, or any wearing apparel, remember, you can save money by buying here. Let us show you.

New Fall and Winter Suits and Overcoats For Men

Our racks are loaded with real values in Men's Fall and Winter Suits and Overcoats for men who like to be well dressed with clothes at a moderate price. We are showing some lovely new patterns in purely Canadian tweeds that are sure to please. The models and workmanship are right up to the minute in every detail. We will be pleased to have you call and look over our stock of fall and winter suits and overcoats whether you intend buying or not. It is no trouble for us to show our goods, as they are all out on handy racks. Come in and look them over.

SCHOOL SPORTS

The annual sports of the Red Deer Public and High Schools were held on the school grounds on Thursday afternoon, and, as usual, were exciting and entertaining, especially the basketball games. Principal Locke, Principal Cummy, and Mr. Jones had charge of the various grades of the boys, while Miss Crowell and the lady Public School teachers looked after the girls. Miss Harrow was the Red Deer referee in the basketball games. Though Red Deer Grade 8 had quite an advantage in the scores over Lacombe Grade 8 to 10 to 3, the other games were very close. Red Deer High School seniors winning out by 6 to 5 over Lacombe seniors, and Red Deer High School juniors over Westlawn juniors by 11 to 9. The Red Deer girls deserve high credit for their three victories. The Lacombe contingent, under Principal Sheane, number some forty, and were most hospitably welcomed and entertained by the Red Deer teachers and pupils. The Red Deer basketball teams were:

THE DAILY MISERY OF ILL-HEALTH

Three Years of Suffering Quickly Relieved by "FRUIT-A-TIVES"

159 Avenue Plus IX, Montreal.

"For three years, I was a terrible sufferer from Dyspepsia and my general health was very bad. I consulted a physician and took his medicine and faithfully carried out his instructions, but I did not improve and finally the doctor told me I could not be cured."

"At this time, a friend advised me to try 'Fruit-a-tives' and I did so."

"After taking two boxes of 'Fruit-a-tives', I was greatly relieved, and gradually this marvelous fruit medicine made me completely well."

"My digestion and general health are splendid—all of which I owe to 'Fruit-a-tives'."

GASPARD DUBORD.

COST $24,000,000, SOLD FOR $2,200

Providence, R.I., September.—The entire stock of the Rhode Island Company, which originally cost the New Haven railroad $24,000,000 when the company was formed to operate that road's trolley interests in the state, was sold at public auction for $2,200. The concern has been in the hands of receivers for more than a year.

REDDER MUSICAL CLUB SEED GRAIN DISTRIBUTION

(Experimental Farms Note)

The annual free distribution of samples of seed grain will be conducted as usual at the Central Experimental Farm, Ottawa, by the Dominion Cerealists.

The following kinds of seed grain will be sent out this season: Spring Wheat (in about 5 lb. samples); White Oats (about 4 lb.); Barley (about 5 lb.); Field Peas (about 5 lb.); Field Beans (about 2 lb.); Flax (about 2 lb.).

Only one sample can be sent to each applicant. Applications must be on printed forms, which may be obtained by writing to the Dominion Cerealists, Experimental Farm, Ottawa, at any time after Sept. 1st.

As the stock of seed is limited, farmers are advised to apply early to avoid disappointment. Those who applied too late last season are particularly requested to send in their names at once, so that application forms may be forwarded to them. No application forms will be furnished after February 1st, 1921.

Mrs. McClung is a public spirited, well known speaker, and anyone who can find it convenient to attend this meeting will be amply repaid. It will not be possible for Red Deer to secure Mrs. McClung again between now and the date of the election, and all who can come will be made welcome to this meeting.

BOARD OF TRADE

thing for Red Deer.

Mr. Kent moved that the Roads Committee investigate the nature of our roads, and if there is anything wrong with the roads, that they report to the minister on the question.

There was no second for Mr. Kent's motion, and the Roads Committee will interview the President of the Auto Club to have a meeting of the Auto Club, and if they could not get a meeting, then the Roads Committee will call a meeting, or report back to this Board.

The question of connection with the C.N.R. was taken up, and the secretary said, Mr. Dixon, the chief engineer, Winnipeg, wired that steel would be laid on this line this year. Some members of the Board felt which would be a bad thing for Red Deer, as Mr. Botterill pointed out.

Another warehouse would be operated here if the line opened up this fall. Strong pressure will be used to induce the company to lay steel at once.

W. E. Lord and J. McMillan moved that 20 road maps be purchased and framed, and be placed on the roads leading into Red Deer, maps to be put under the Roads Committee and Auto Club. The motion was carried.

President Welliver spoke at some length on the meeting of the Association of Boards of Trade at Edmonton. There were some twelve places represented at the meeting. They decided to organize an associated Board of Trade of the province. This would be of great importance to the province, and their executive would deal with great questions affecting the Province, the Dominion and the Empire.

The Association would be known as the Provincial Government to take up the question of hydro-electric power and coal and gas. They thought the appointing of a freight rates expert should be appointed for the province.

The question of inter-Dominion trade over the deep waterways came up, but the Board felt that they should leave the question in the hands of the Dominion Government. A resolution was brought up urging the government to do all in its power regarding movement of grain. A resolution was passed urging that the embargo against cattle be removed. A banquet was given in the evening to the delegates. Mr. Ramsey spoke on his visit to England. He did not look for any sudden drop in the price of goods. It would be gradual. He could not give anything but a bad guess as to what would happen regarding the fall of prices in the near future.

Mr. Galbraith moved a vote of thanks to the president for his address, and to Mr. Welliver and Mr. Stephenson for efforts on behalf of the Board at Edmonton.

Mr. Botterill seconded the motion, and a hearty handclapping signified the passing of the motion by the meeting.

The President welcomed Mr. Garland, extending to him a hearty welcome, and hoping that he would take the same interest in the Board of Trade and city affairs that Mr. Whitehouse had done.

The meeting adjourned at 10:45 p.m.

The Boy Scouts paraded to the Protestant Church Sunday morning under the command of Scoutmaster Callender. They made a splendid showing, and the bugle band was a credit to the organization.

Humber's Diamonds

NEVER BEFORE IN THE STORE'S HISTORY HAVE WE BEEN SO WELL STOCKED WITH DIAMONDS

Platinum and Diamond Engagement Rings

A large number of our diamonds go into the manufacture of Engagement Rings. We make a specialty of these.

The excellence of our gems, the beauty of our designs, the skill of our artisans and diamond setters, have given us a leadership in this respect.

Engagement Rings of Platinum with a Single Diamond, with Three Diamonds, or in Cluster Form, are all Exceedingly Popular.

Equally Popular when combined with Colored Gems
